Achievement and Integrity — Athletes Using Drugs

Wednesday, August 9, 2006

The exploding controversy over Tour de France winner Floyd Landis raises all the big questions about athletics, character, integrity, and human enhancement. The final disposition of the case is still pending, but the question of doping, the use of hormones and human enhancement drugs — along with related practices — is now unavoidable.

For the Christian, a central question in all of this is the relationship between achievement and character. We discussed this case Tuesday on The Albert Mohler Program. Our special guest was my friend C. J. Mahaney. Listen to the program here.
