The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary

Southern Seminary was founded in 1859 as the first institution of the Southern Baptist Convention and this year celebrates its 125th anniversary.

Its early classes were held in Greenville, South Carolina, with 26 students and four professors. The Civil War forced the seminary to move to Louisville, Kentucky, in 1877, where a "permanent" campus was built downtown.

But enrollment quickly outgrew the crowded site. In 1926, the seminary occupied its present campus, a magnificent rolling tract of 100 acres.

The Southern Seminary campus consists of 46 buildings, many in classical Georgian architecture. Among the facilities: one of the nation's largest Aeolian-Skinner pipe organs, an archaeological museum and a fully-equipped television studio.

The 500,000-volume Boyce Centennial Library is one of America's premier collections of theological materials.

Because Southern is known worldwide as an exceptional center for graduate study in theology, students come to the campus from as many as 20 nations.

The Woman's Committee

The Woman's Committee at Southern Seminary was organized in 1961 to provide a direct channel for participation of women in the work of the seminary. In addition to presenting the Distinguished Christian Woman Award and naming the Kentucky Baptist Woman of the Year, the organization provides local service projects for the seminary and maintains scholarships for qualified students.
